WELCOME MESSAGE

We are proud to celebrate 20th anniversary of Wonca Europe and 25th anniversary of TAHUD, Turkish Association of Family Physicians. We hope to continue the success of previous congresses and carry out that success to the next congress.

The idea of choosing the theme “Being Young Staying Young” was to look through past and to look ahead when we were leaving behind the twenty years as Wonca Europe and twenty five years as TAHUD.

The years ending with zero and five have been accepted as evaluation and planning years. For this reason we aimed to place sessions to discuss the future perspectives of Wonca Europe on education, clinical practice, organization of family physicians, when we were forming the congress program.

We wanted to ensure to provide wide variety of opinions to be presented on such important issues. That’s how the “Grand Sessions” created. With the aim of increasing the number of plenary sessions beyond the keynote sessions, and capturing the opportunity to listen more doyens and experts, five grand session time slots have been created at the congress while there were 21 paralel sessions in other slots.

With the motto “Being Young Staying Young” meaning dynamism for our disicpline, our aim was not only to make the experts to be heard but also to give the chance to each participant who wish to share and exchange their own experiences thus to ensure a more colorful and broad participation congress and increase attendance of young doctors.

With this aim we have created nineteen BRITE sessions. BRITE sessions aim to provide family doctors to share their ideas by discussing the positive and negative consequences of their practices. We think these sessions will motivate reflective learning by encouraging the physicians to review their practice and also will contribute to the identification of new research areas.

The participants of Pre Conference organized by VdGM has increased seventy percent. On the other hand one third of the participants attending to the congress are young family doctors. In this congress, for the first time, we have made all leaders of Young Doctors’ Movement of Wonca to come together in Istanbul.

Our congress is colorful in terms of content and it has a green philosophy. For this purpose, we avoided to print papers as much as possible. We have saved at least 1,500 trees when we calculate only our monthly emails. More than this we contributed developments of forest by creating Wonca Europe Memorial Forest.

We are also proud of giving new opportunities to the participants who “stays young”. Participants of the congress who wishes to observe the primary care in Turkey closely, and to have new friends, are hosted by Turkish colleagues before the congress within the HostPro program.

Istanbul is a magnificent city in the heart of Europe and Asia. We advice you to see beauty of the city. We have decided to make 20th year celebration at a private boat on Bosphorous particularly. We hope you to have splendid time with beautiful Istanbul panorama.

We would like to thank Wonca Europe president Job FM Metsemakers and the liason person Anna Stavdal, other members of Wonca Europe Executive Committee and International Advisory Board for their supports and contributions. We are also grateful to Micheal Kidd, Wonca World President, and to all people who made this congress real.

Hoping to have a successful congress.

The tree bends when it is young - The value of flexibility and adaptability for the development of family medicine

Amanda Howe is a professor of Primary Care in University of East Anglia, she was former honorary secretary Royal College of General Practitioners, currently she is Vice Chair Council (Professional Development Portfolio) in the same organization. She is also President Elect of Wonca.

Honoured hosts, dear colleagues and friends,

It is a great privilege to be a keynote speaker for the 2015 WONCA EUROPE Conference in Istanbul. My talk will relate to the conference theme, and my title “Ağaç yaş iken eğilir” (‘Trees bend when they are young’) reflects my intention to discuss the cycle of growth for both our discipline and our organisations - and to evaluate the strengths of being young and growing older!

I have had two reasons to reflect on what it means to be young, or stay young. The first is personal - I have recently had my 60th birthday, and also become a grandmother for the first time. The return to having significant responsibility for a very young child, and remembering the very basic demands of parenting, provides me with a life experience that is very different from that of caring for patients, or chairing medical school committees, or meeting senior colleagues across the world for major scientific and policy discussions. It is an unconditional commitment, with little glamour or intellectual output, but huge emotional demands and rewards. It also heralds a new cycle of life – one where one is reminded of the fragility of health and wellbeing. And it brings more experience of the patient perspective – our essential reliance on the health providers getting it right – in the clinic, in the hospital, and at all stages of care.

How has this helped me to think about our discipline of family medicine, and our careers as family doctors? I can look back at my own career and see different phases - the contribution of my family background, school and university opportunities; then choosing family medicine, entering clinical practice, and an unexpected transition into academic, national and international roles.

I know that for many young doctors, it is often daunting to think about how to make appropriate career choices – especially where to work, how much work to do, how to balance clinical work with other interests and commitments such as child rearing, and indeed how to choose a speciality. Our discipline is also young in global terms, and often this adds insecurity – we may have to defend our status, the value of our discipline, the quality of our service, and fight for the resources we need to do a good job. We also have to increase the both the public’s and politicians’ understanding of the added value of family medicine as a speciality in the health system. So being young, whether personally or professionally, can be an uncomfortable and uncertain time, with added risks and anxieties. I shall include some factors in my talk which can help to guide us through these early stages.

The second reason I have been thinking about 'growing up' is related to my deepening understanding of WONCA, its history and different organisational parts. The lens of history is one which can magnify our understanding of who we are and why we act as we do – just as family doctors often need to understand what motivates our patients to use health care and live healthily, we need to understand our own strengths and weaknesses.

If we look back at WONCA's inaugural meeting, the key ingredients were a core group of committed people with a vision, building on their own experiences and others to create a professional organisation. They worked hard to define and deliver the new organisation, using conventional modes of creating a professional governance and representational structure. Wes Fabb, in his report of the inaugural conference, noted that what had been achieved could not yet be measured in finite terms, but would worldwide add to the quality of care people received from their family doctors.

One of the striking aspects of the history of WONCA, and this remains true today, is the longstanding commitment of many of its leaders in what essentially is a voluntary capacity. Wes Fabb, for example, was involved from 1972, and was CEO for twenty years. Our President, Michael Kidd, mentions in his obituary message to David Game (who was President, and also WONCA Editor for 28 years) that Michael was already attending WONCA Conferences in 1990 – 25 years ago. I myself can therefore only count as a relatively young activist within WONCA, attending my first European conference in the late 1990s, joining a working party in 2001, and my first world conference in Orlando in 2004. But many have joined after me – we have seen huge increases in the numbers of member organisations, and of young doctors getting involved in their regional movements - and more are welcome! We hope that WONCA in all its forms – national, regional, working parties and special interest groups – will offer our members a scope which will enhance their professional development over many years to come.

We welcome the growth and activities of our members – and at the same time, it presents challenges. With bigger aims, more members, and more activities come new demands; but our Secretariat globally is still only 4 people. In Singapore we had 3 staff, Wes and Marian ran this on 1.5 people – 4 still seems very small for the work we are now doing. The regional groupings also struggle with capacity, and to me this is a bit like a young forest growing on a hill side – we have great strength in our roots but the ground under us could slide away. So there are some conditions we need to fulfil for organizational resilience which I will outline – these include sustainable financing; strong but flexible governance; streamlining bureaucracy; capacity building; being effective politically; being flexible, inclusive and open; making strong political alliances which promote our mission and its impacts; having evidence to support our work; and delivering on our promises.. We have to be effective at both doing our jobs well and collecting data to prove our effectiveness – or to identify areas where we could do better if further resourced.

The final part of my talk will be about staying young – how to stay fresh in spite of the demands of work, home, long-term relationships, and the varying challenges of professional and political environments. In Prague in 2013 I spoke about factors which assist doctors to be resilient – this includes keeping ourselves educationally up to date, making good relationships with patients and colleagues, knowing how to get support when needed, and making sure that over time we have different career opportunities which develop new skills and enthusiasms. WONCA has a role in helping with your resilience, and therefore keeping you ‘young’ as a professional – we provide support networks, new information and ideas, and a peer group with shared values. We also work on your behalf - we try to make persistent and committed efforts to improve the external status of family medicine, and so to make your own experience as family doctors more meaningful. My final slides will give some early views about the programmes of work that I aim to pursue with you over the next period of time.

Role of Academia, Science, Ethics and Mentor for the Future of Medicine

Prof. Emin Kansu is a professor of hematology and chairman at basic oncology department of Hacettepe University in Ankara, Turkey. He has been member of European Union and Europe Scientific Committee Ethics Working Groups. He is a member of Turkish Scientific and Technical Research Council (TUBITAK) and Scientific Research Ethics Committee.

University is an educational institution designed for instruction, examination, or both, of students in many branches of advanced learning, conferring degrees in various faculties, and often embodying colleges and similar institutions. Its vision should include to achieve the highest levels of distinction in discovery and dissemination of knowledge in the education of students.

Also an academic institution should attain the highest possible level of achievement in education and prepare them for positions of leadership and service. It will also give priority to research and teaching of its faculty with its distinctive emphasis on excellence in undergraduate and postgraduate education as well as service to society. During the university training, each student has to learn science, how to reach the scientific truth, to ask right questions at right time and to find the correct answers to his or her questions. Students are expected to acquire analytical and creative thinking leading to novel ideas.

In academia, scientific leaders are mentors and they help to build the mentee's career. This mentor-mentee relationship forms the basis of an academic microenvironment. Academic microenvironment is an interactive environment in which a mentee can greatly benefit and receive a learning experience. A mentor should recognize the mentee's potential abilities and encourages him/her. A good mentor should set reachable standards, goals and expectations for the mentee. A mentor should be supportive, "good listener" and a "good communicator". Mentor – mentee relationship usually includes mutual interests in area of study. If this becomes a productive scientific relationship it will eventually promote professional excellence and growth. All mentors should be honest and teach their mentee's ethical standards in research and publication. The perfect mentor/mentee relationship is an essential aspect of future of medicine.

What changes in the role of family physicians and general practitioners?

Prof. Jan De Maeseener, MD, PhD.

Head of Department of Family Medicine and Primary Health Care, Ghent University. Family Physician Community Health Center “Botermarkt”, Ledeborg – Gent, Belgium. Chairman European Forum for Primary Care.

1- Introduction: the changing society.

Nowadays, general practitioners and family physicians are confronted with a very rapidly changing environment. First of all, there are the epidemiological and demographical transitions: from acute conditions towards chronic disorders, with an increasing amount of people with multi-morbidity¹. Another important evolution is the scientific and technological innovation (e.g. ICT), that creates opportunities to bring technology that was formerly not available in primary care in the hand of family physicians. Unfortunately, we are confronted in the daily practice for primary care with an increasing social gradient in health, with as a consequence e.g. in a country like Belgium, a gap of 18 years in healthy life expectancy for men at the age of 25, depending on whether they had only basic education, or a university or a school for higher education degree. Probably the most “disruptive innovation” in the last decade, has been the changing position of the patient, who becomes more and more an informed actor in the health care process. Finally, nowadays, and increasingly due to migration of refugees for war and insecurity, the population we serve is more and more diverse, multi-cultural, and so health care becomes more and more “global”.

These challenges require a change in the role of general practitioner/family physicians, but also in the way the profession organizes its practice. Society expects primary care providers to contribute to the “triple aim”: better care, more health and more value (i.e. the relation between quality and cost)². We will now describe the changes in roles of family physicians and general practitioners at the nano-, micro-, meso- and macro-level.

2- The Nano-level.

This is the level of the concrete interaction between a person looking for care and a provider. At this level, to a large extent, the experience of “quality” will be assessed by the person looking for care. Person-centered approach as defined in the “World Health Support: Primary Health Care: now more than ever!”³. Nowadays the family physician does no more work as a single-handed practitioner, but will work in team, acting as an “integrator” of the care process: exploring new complaints and problems, taking care for appropriate support of chronic conditions, empowering the patient and shifting the paradigm from problem-oriented care, towards goal-oriented care, taking the goals of the patient as the ultimate point of reference for the care processes⁴. At the nano-level, increasingly, electronic devices will be used in order to capture information from the patient. The challenge will be to avoid a “digital device” and to find an appropriate balance between “compassion” and “computer”.

3- The Micro-level.

The Micro-level is where a team, working in a practice organizes the care for a (defined) community. At this level appropriate sharing of information, through the Electronic Patient Record (with actions for the patient and for all the care providers, taking into account privacy-issues), is the cornerstone of a comprehensive approach. Increasingly, it will be needed to agree on appropriate coding and classification of the information. Both the International Classification of Primary Care (ICPC-2) and the “International Classification of Function” (ICF), will be needed in order to classify appropriately the (multiple) conditions of a patient. A contextual approach will require cooperation with care providers from other sectors e.g. social workers. In complex situations, the patient may choose one of his/her care providers as a “case-manager” to coordinate the care in continuous interaction with the patient. Increasingly, the practices active at the micro-level will work together through networks in order to share expertise and improve access. Patients appreciate very much the opportunity to choose (1 or 2) “preferred providers” in order to enhance “personal continuity”. The information available in the “Electronic Patient Record” may not only be used for individual care, but may contribute to an analysis of the problems a community is facing. This can happen in the framework of “Community Oriented Primary Care”, where primary care providers, together with the community identify problems, formulate a “Community Diagnosis” and develop interventions in order to address the “upstream causes” of ill-health⁵. An important focus in these interventions will be the contribution to more “social cohesion” in order to improve the health status of the population.

Increasingly, the model of Interprofessional Community Health Centers is developed. In general, these interprofessional practices comprise family physicians/general practitioners, nurses, social workers, occupational therapists, dentists, health promoters, physiotherapists, nurses, midwives,... The team takes responsibility for the care for a defined population. Cooperation may be stimulated by the use of a “Needs-based integrated mixed capitation”, as e.g. is the case in the Belgian Community Health Centers.

4- The Meso-level.

The different practices at the primary care level, also when they work together in networks, are not able to provide the organizational power that is needed to make a strong primary care system. Therefore, organization at the meso-level is needed. Internationally, a meso-level is quite often defined as a geographic area, with 75.000 up to 125.000 inhabitants. At this level primary care may realize continuity functions (GP-posts for out-of-hours care,...), support services e.g. palliative home care,... And this may also be the level where the providers interact and negotiate with the local authorities. It is also at this level that primary care providers and especially family physicians/ general practitioners may take up an “advocacy role” giving a voice to those who do not have a voice in society (the poor, disabled, illiterate, undocumented,...). More and more tasks will shift from hospital to primary care, it will be important to strengthen the meso-level, in order to increase the performance of the primary health care system.

5- The Macro-level.

This is the level where policy-decisions are taken. Nowadays, there is a lot of rhetoric by politicians, explaining why it is so important to strengthen the primary care. On the other hand, it is quite difficult to shift resources from secondary to primary care, when components of the care are no longer dealt with in hospitals, but at the primary care level. The principle “the money follows the patient” is simple, the practice is tough. In Europe, still a lot of countries do not have a full patient list system, neither they have the regulations in order to enable appropriate referral and “gate-keeping”⁶.

As far as financing is concerned, primary care, should basically be financed through a “population-oriented” mechanism, whereas in secondary care a “disease-oriented” financing mechanism is used. Strong organizations or family physicians/general practitioners, if possible in interprofessional cooperation, are needed in order to translate the scientific evidence into concrete policy actions.

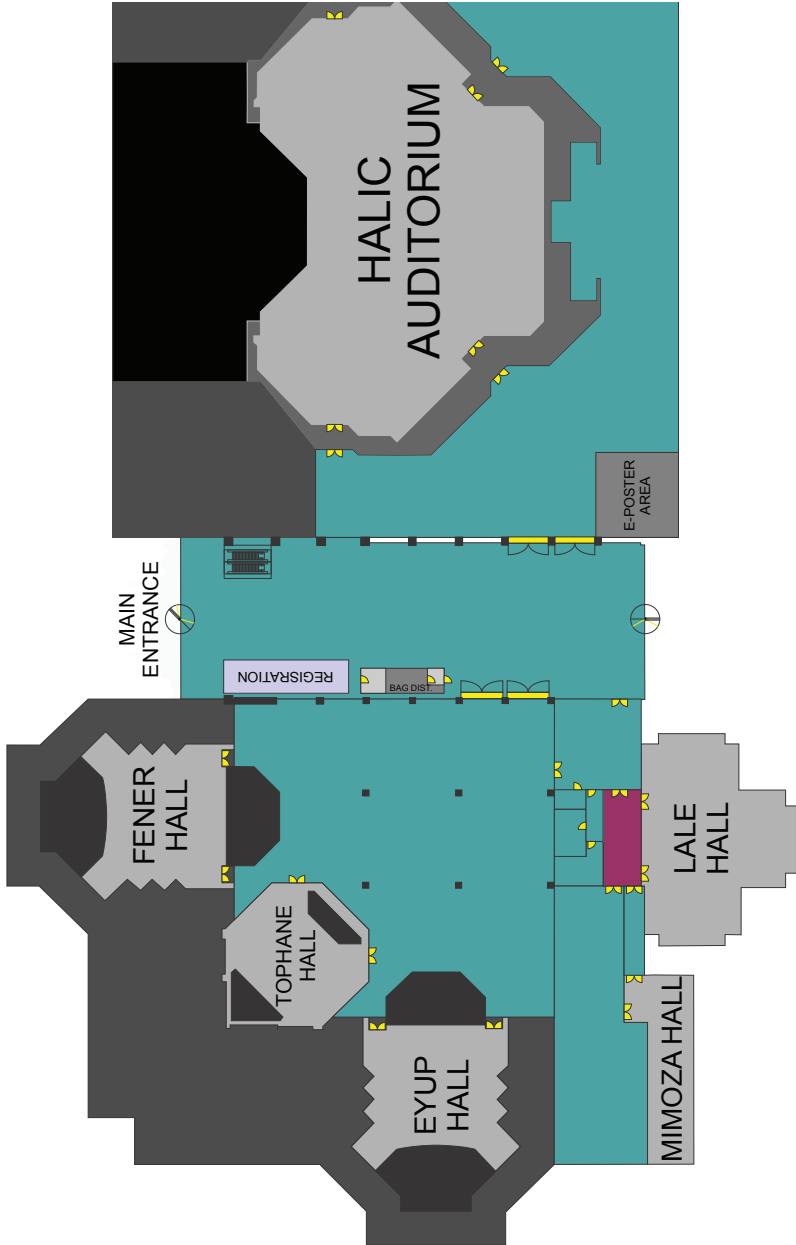

6- What does this mean for the family physician/general practitioner?

This transition will not only require the acquisition of new skills (Collaborative Leadership, Comprehensive Data-Analysis, understanding of policy development), but also a new type of organization of the practice, using interprofessional networks that engage in Intersectoral Action for Health. These networks will ask for new organizational approaches: replacing the traditional bureaucratic “Command-and-Control”-approach by a “Complex Adaptive Systems”-approach⁷. In order to be able to perform all these tasks in a sustainable way, the family physician/general practitioner will become a “reflective practitioner” who takes care of the personal health and of the wellbeing of the team of care providers. By doing so, family physicians/general practitioners are ready to contribute to the “Sustainable Development Goals” 2015-2030⁸.

22nd WONCA Europe Conference
June 28 – July 1, 2017, Prague, Czech Republic

It is a great pleasure and honour for The Czech Society of General Practice to be a host organization for the 22nd WONCA Europe Conference, which will be held in Prague in the beginning of July 2017. WONCA Europe conferences have become the most influential events for general practitioners from Europe and elsewhere contributing to global awareness of the latest clinical primary care strategies and to the development of professional issues. We want to contribute to this tradition and even to push the quality and significance of the conference forward and to enhance the unique spirit of WONCA Europe. ‘United in Diversity’ is the official motto of the European Union. Having been already united in WONCA family we want to grow as a discipline in European diversity by learning from each other and exchanging experience and knowledge. This explains a theme of our Conference: “Growing together in Diversity”.
